

Do you like adventure? Something that could be dangerous? Here's what you do: go to any open space area, you know where there are no homes; take off your shoes, cover your eyes and take a walk through the grass. That's not an adventure or dangerous you say. Well the adventure and danger comes in when you try to avoid the landmines left by some one's dog. Are you crazy? You ask. I would never do that. Probably not, but kids go barefoot all the time and spend a lot of summer running around in places like this. Remember pet waste contains bacteria and viruses that can cause your kid to get sick. So pick up after your dog and if you see someone else not picking up their pet waste remind them to help the environment and the kids in town and pick up the waste.
